VINDEX, MARYLAND

1904 - 1997

As in much of Appalachia, the story of coal mining and the history of the railroads are deeply entwined. In 1881, Henry Gassaway Davis, an enterprising and well-connected former employee of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, decided to build a new railroad from Piedmont, WV, into the rich coal and timberlands along the upper Potomac River. This railroad, known as the West Virginia Central and Pittsburgh, initially ran from a junction with the B&O near Beryl, WV, along the West Virginia side of the Potomac to Davis, WV. In 1905, the WVC&P was bought out by the Western Maryland Railroad.

MARYLAND

WEST VIRGINIA

In 1904 the Three Forks Coal and Coke Company built a three level wooden bridge over the Potomac River and laid a 42" narrow gauge railroad from the main line of the West Virginia Central and Pittsburgh at Chaffee, WV. This railroad ran for a distance of two miles up a hollow on the Maryland side to the future site of a town to be called Maysville, MD. *

The Maryland Bureau of Mines report for 1907 notes that Three Forks Mining Company shipped 4,000 tons of coal from January to May 1907. The report states that the single opening into the Lower Kittanning, Davis, or six-foot seam, was naturally drained and fan ventilated. The report also notes that the rail grade into the mine was quite steep and that company owned dwellings were being built in the area. The 42" gauge of the railroad from the mine to the main line meant that the coal had to be reloaded into standard gauge coal cars at Chaffee, WV.

In 1912, a flood destroyed the wooden bridge over the Potomac. When the bridge was replaced with a modern concrete and steel structure, the entire line was widened to standard gauge and a new Shay gear drive engine was purchased. Now loaded cars could be sent directly from the processing plant onto the main line. In April 1914, the Chaffee Coal Company bought the entire operation including the railroad.

Sometime between 1914 and 1918, the residents of Maysville applied to the U.S. Postal Service for a post office. Since there was another town in Maryland named Maysville, the application was rejected. A second application with the name of Stottlemeyersville was also rejected because of its length. Along with the second rejection came a list of suggested names. Vindex was the first name on the list and was immediately adopted. Incidentally, the 1910 Maryland Bureau of Mines report lists the mine's superintendent as Sheridan Stottlemeyer.

The 1920 Maryland Geological Survey, Second Report on the Coals of Maryland, notes that there were two openings into the "Davis" seam. Mining was done by the room and pillar system with the rooms driven on 45-foot centers with 20-foot wide headings. Equipment listed was 125 one ton, 42" gauge mine cars, a tippie equipped with a 2" stationary bar screen, a 30-foot long Link Belt Conveyer picking table and one 28 ton Shay rail engine. The report also notes that the town of Vindex consisted of 100 company houses, a grammar school, a company store, and a post office. Production for 1918 was 79,333 tons using 75 miners and 10 laborers. In late 1920, the operation was sold to the Manor Coal Company who split the mining and rail operations into two companies known as the Manor Coal Company and the Chaffee Railroad.

Railroad reports for 1921 note 119,772 tons shipped or roughly 40 cars per day. This report also notes the steep grades of between 4% and 7% between the Potomac River and the town and a grade of 9% from the town to the tippie. Manor Coal Company reports point out shipping costs nearly 3.5 times higher than neighboring operations, terrific wear on equipment, and high accident rates due to the steep grades and sharp curves on the line. In 1921, the Chaffee Railroad was sold to the Western Maryland Railroad for $320,000.00.

In May and June 1922, the local newspapers reported strikes and violence in the coal towns along the upper Potomac River, including the destruction of some facilities of the Manor Coal Company. That same year, the Governor of Maryland called out the militia and requested federal troops to keep the peace in the area. It should be noted that even during the strikes, the company advanced each miner $2.00 per day to feed his family.

The 1930s brought lean times to the Manor Coal Company, the people of Vindex, and the Chaffee branch of the Western Maryland Railroad. One bright point was the addition of a third hand, 70-ton Shay locomotive to the line.

In 1940 the mining operation was sold to the Johnstown Coal and Coke Company, and the demands of the war years brought Vindex to its high point. In 1943, 200 miners produced 304,486 tons of coal, and the population of the town was estimated to be 500.

In May 1945, the Western Maryland took delivery of the last and largest Shay engine ever built. Even the monstrous 162-ton, four truck, "Big 6" could only manage seven loaded coal cars per trip down the steep grades from the tipple to the Potomac. It is interesting to note that while the Big 6 only spent six years at Vindex, it spent 26 years in the B&O Railroad Museum and currently serves on another line noted for its murderous grades, the Cass Scenic Railroad at Cass WV.

"BIG 6" UNDER THE TIPPLE AT VINDEK

By 1948, the demand for coal began to decline and continuing miner strikes drove American industry to other sources of energy. The end of the war and the rising popularity of diesel power for the railroads also diminished the coal market. Total production for Johnstown Coal and Coke's Vindex operation for 1948 was 196,848 tons. By 1949 the yield had slipped to 92,941 tons. Much of this coal was sold to the Western Maryland Railroad to fuel its shrinking fleet of steam locomotives. To make matters worse, the quality of the coal from the last active opening, Manor Number 3 Mine, declined to the point that the railroad refused to burn it.

In March 1950, Johnstown Coal and Coke closed the last mine and removed much of the equipment from the processing plant. The remaining citizens of the town were allowed to stay for their usual $10.00 per month rent and water bill. In 1955 the Western Maryland removed the tracks to the tipple. During the 1950s and 1960s, some careless strip mining and high wall auguring were done along the out crop lines of the Upper and Lower Kittanning seams. This low-grade coal was transported by truck, and most was sold for local use.

In 1967, Johnstown Coal and Coke sold 6,000 acres of land and the entire town of Vindex to the Douglas Coal Company. To save tax expenses, Douglas Coal simply evicted the remaining 38 families and tore everything down. Vindex was gone forever.

VINDEX 1960

The Maryland Bureau of Mines estimates the total production of the area for the years 1906 to 1950 to have been approximately 5,600,000 tons.

By the 1960s it became evident to most Americans that the land had paid a high price for the nation's growth from the industrial revolution to the arsenal of democracy. The rivers were stained, the air was unhealthy and the soil was tainted. Coal, the fuel of industry from the start of the industrial revolution through our victory in World War II, played a major part in this pollution.

In 1977 new federal laws prompted the State of Maryland to study and define the sources of these pollutants. This report, which was called the Maryland Abandoned Mine Inventory, identified the Vindex area as one of the worst sites in the state. Fortunately, the new laws that made environmental protection compulsory for all mining operations provided a source of funding to clean up older sites. This source was a federal coal tax that was rebated back to each coal producing state in direct proportion to its coal production.

The study of the Vindex area identified 6,750 linear feet (1.28 miles) of open strip mine high wall, 25 acres of coal waste, 12 open mine portals, 10 acres of garbage and the worst quality single point source of acid mine water in the state. This discharge from a mine mouth located on the Clarion seam, had a normal pH of 3, or about the same acidity as grapefruit juice.

In early 1994 the Maryland Bureau of Mines completed a comprehensive plan to mitigate the damage caused to the Upper Potomac River by the Vindex site. This reclamation, which was completed in cooperation with the Construction Division of the Maryland Department of General Services, was the largest and most expensive reclamation ever done in the state. The project consisted of the regrading and revegetating of 74 acres of land. The work required the moving of 444,000 cubic yards of earth including 156,000 cubic yards of coal waste, installation of 6,185 liner feet (1.17 miles) of under ground drain pipe, construction of 6,135 liner feet (1.16 miles) of rip-rap ditches, restoration of 1,350 liner feet (.26 mile) of stream channel, and the installation of a lime doser to treat the acid water. Also included was the application of 750 tons of lime and 4,440 pounds of grass seed.

The project, which was performed by Pyramid Equipment Company of Frostburg, MD, was completed in July 1997 at a total cost of $3,329,430.00.

* Scrip collectors, this solves the mystery of Maysville, Maryland. (Edkins, Maryland, Maysville 1829) Maysville became Vindex and Vindex is located in Garrett County, Md.

The writer would like to express his thanks to the staff of the Maryland Bureau of Mines in Frostburg, MD for their invaluable help in preparing this article.

This article was written by Ed George, an avid scrip collector and Area Supervisor for the Construction Division of the Maryland Department of General Services.
